Happily Ever After?

Chapter 1 by Sapman Of The Trees

I stared down at the pitiful little rag doll that was supposed to be a fairy. It was missing both eyes and was covered in soot.

"Poor people play with such pitiful little toys," I said to my boyfriend, "this rag doesn't even look anywhere close to a fairy. Look at it!"

"Give it to me," he said. I handed it over to him and he took out a lighter. He threw it on the ground and lit it aflame. It was reduced to a pile of ash. We both laughed. We were about to walk away when I saw something shimmer in the pile of ash. My boyfriend must have saw it too, because he abruptly stopped looked at me.

"Did you see that?" he asked. I nodded my head. Just then there was a strong gust of wind that blew the ash away, revealing two identical charms.

They were both bright pink roses lined with silver.

"OMG! These things could make us rich!" I yelled in a mock tone. We both had more money than we would ever need, and we knew it.

"Eh, might as well keep them," my boyfriend laughed. We both bent over and picked the bizarre charms up off the concrete. Once the thing touched my hand, I knew I had made a big mistake.
